~ 40 YEARS FOR ONE SONG? ~

 After events in NYC on Dec. 8, 1980, a local music artist wrote a song, recorded it – and gave it the deep six shortly thereafter. Only now, finally, is it being published.

INTERVIEW [excerpt]:

Crow 'Birdland' McCaw: Your new STEWARDS ECLEC-TRIC single isn't really new, is it? It's 40 years old! Why didn't you release this when that news was current?

The Steward: Why? Because I hated it, that's why. Not the music or the lyrics, not the song itself, not honoring John Lennon or the George Martin-esque arrangement and production.
No. I hated having to write it. I hated the reason for writing it.
Still do. But one of my cohorts here at the musicians' consortium insisted the piece should see the light of day, and when I re-listened, I had to agree. I waited long enough. So we finished it using modern recording tech, and pushed it out for this 40-year observance, just to see if it would resonate with anybody. We call it simply J. Lennon Blues.

Crow: Your so-called singles always have two separate songs or 'sides'. You say the flip side is 'left-handed hip hop'. What in the blessed name of Rolling Stone is that?
Would you explain?

Steward: No – I won't. Our lissners aren't idiots. Whether they're experienced audiophiles or just curious, they'll get it.
It's titled Nonnel J. Blues, and now some of them already get
it. It's a completely new production that trips off the old one.
